

Legal and Bioethical Dilemmas Regarding Surrogacy

Wednesday, September 28, 1:00-2:00 p.m.

2266 Kirkhof Center

In the last thirty years, the desire to become a parent has been achieved in many cases through surrogacy, a phenomenon that has become a heated issue of law and bioethics. The change in families, due to historical, social and cultural factors, should induce lawmakers to address the issue considering the current reality, the most modern legal literature, and knowledge from the medical sciences. My talk will describe the complex problems arising in Italy and Michigan from the current legal framework, and I will offer my recommendations for a solution.

Dr. Alessia Valongo

Adjunct Professor of Private and Family Law
University of Perugia, Italy

Questions? Please contact Prof. John Constantelos, Department of Political Science at 331-2320 or by email at constanj@gvsu.edu.