

Resource Guide in Public and Nonprofit Administration

Version: 21 August 2006

Peer-Reviewed Journals

The following is a list of peer-reviewed journals that frequently contain articles useful to students studying public administration, nonprofit management, public policy and urban studies. After the title is an indication of the location of full text for current and back issues in electronic format (Proquest, Wison Select Plus or EBSCO databases) and the current issue's hard copy (downtown Steelcase Library or main campus Zumberge Library). Please keep in mind that this information changes frequently.

About peer-review: Editors of scholarly, scientific journals use the peer-review process to select and to screen submissions. The journal editors send all submitted manuscripts to referees who are experts in the relevant subject matter. There is usually a double blind standard whereby the referees are anonymous to the authors and visa versa. The referees examine the article for proper theory, method, and logic. The referees will recommend accepting, rejecting or modifying the manuscript. Only when the referees are satisfied that the manuscript meets the standards of the discipline will it be published as a journal article.

Articles in peer-reviewed journals are considered reliable and authoritative by scholars within their discipline. However, students should consider that the peer-review process may make articles less timely and may introduce bias against theoretical novelty and methodological innovation.
