February 26th: "Is American Global Leadership Waning?"

Dr. Amitav Acharya, UNESCO Chair in Transnational Challenges and Governance and Distinguished Professor of International Relations at the School of International Service, American University

Since World War II, the U.S. built and maintained an international order on the foundation of superior military and economic power, ensuring the country a leadership role in world affairs. Now, it seems, that leadership is coming to an end—or at least changing significantly. Why is the global order changing and what does that mean for American leadership? If the U.S. doesn't lead, who will?

Dr. Acharya is author of Whose Ideas Matter? (Cornell 2009), The Making of Southeast Asia (Cornell 2013), Rethinking Power, Institutions and Ideas in World Politics (Routledge 2013) and The End of American World Order (Polity 2014, Oxford 2015).

He is the inaugural holder (2016-18) of the Boeing Company Chair in International Relations at the newly established Schwarzman Scholars Program, sponsored by the Stephen A. Schwarzman Education Foundation of New York at Tsinghua University, one of China's top academic institutions. He was a Fellow of the Asia Center, Harvard University, and a Fellow of Harvard's John F. Kennedy School of Government. He was elected to the Christensen Fellowship at St Catherine's College, Oxford University in 2012 and held the inaugural Nelson Mandela Visiting Professorship in International Relations at Rhodes University, South Africa during 2012-13. He is the first non-Western scholar to be elected as the President (for 2014-15) of the International Studies Association (ISA), the largest and most well-known scholarly association in international studies worldwide.

Dr. Acharya has contributed op-eds to foreignaffairs.com, Washington Post (Monkey Cage Blog), International Herald Tribune, Financial Times, Japan Times, Jakarta Post, Indian Express, and Times of India and interviewed by CNN International, BBC World Service, CNBC, Channel News Asia, Radio Australia, and Al Jazeera TV on current affairs.
