

Topics in Social Work Ethics: Self-Care, Supervision, and Self-Determination

At a glance...

This training provides social workers with an exploration of key ethical considerations in their profession. Participants will explore the concept of self-care as an ethical imperative, learning strategies to prevent burnout, maintain personal well-being, and ultimately provide more effective support to clients. Participants will also develop insights into the role of supervision in ethical practice, learning how to seek and provide guidance in challenging situations, promote accountability, and ensure the highest standards of client care. Lastly, participants will review the delicate balance between promoting client autonomy and adhering to ethical guidelines. Through case studies and discussions, participants will learn strategies to empower clients in decision-making while upholding ethical principles and ensuring their well-being.

Objectives

1. Understand the importance of self-care in maintaining ethical standards
2. Enhance ethical decision-making through effective supervision
3. Empower client self-determination while respecting ethical boundaries

Speaker

Joshua Bishop has worked in human services for nearly 20 years. His clinical experience is in trauma treatment, congregational social work, and youthwork. He is trained in three evidence-based practices for trauma treatment: CPT for PTSD, Accelerated Resolution Therapy, and Trauma-Focused CBT. His quantitative research interests are generosity, volunteerism, adverse childhood experiences, trauma education, and trauma treatment.
