RESEARCH EXPERIENCE

Researcher: August 2004 – present

Department of Psychology, Grand Valley State University

Experience: Conducted weekly lab meetings with undergraduate research assistants, including examining relevant literature, conceptualizing and designing original research examining communication variables evident in couples engaging in aggressive interpersonal behavior and researching the contextual factors contributing to dating violence. This research line examines the self-reported and interview factors that impact an individual's decision to participate in prevention programs for dating violence and provides a contextual analysis of violent incidents.

Graduate Researcher: August 1999 – August 2004

Supervisors: Galen Alessi, Ph.D.
Amy Naugle, Ph.D.

Experience: Participated in regular meetings with graduate-level researchers that consisted of project development, methodology, statistical analyses, and manuscript preparation. Conducted independent research examining a widely used communication technique in marital therapy to determine how its effectiveness was mediated by the couples' current level of marital discord and the topic discussed. Responsibilities included recruitment, training, and supervision of undergraduate research assistants and conducting literature reviews of marital and other research areas. Assisted other researchers develop and refine projects as they relate to the function of sexuality in violent marital relationships and dating relationships.
