Discussion - Questions for MDE

- We understand that candidates who complete their Educational Leadership program and apply for certification before September 1st do not need to take the test to receive their certification, provided all other conditions are met. Is this still accurate?
 - a. Correct. Candidates who apply for the ES or CO endorsement before the test is required as part of the application in MOECS do not need to have a passing test score. Your candidates who have already completed their programs but have not yet applied should apply now/soon to avoid the test requirement.
- Additionally, will they be required to take the test in five years when they apply for re-certification?
 - No, once someone holds the ES or CO endorsement, they will not need to take a test to renew their credential.

Questions for MDE

- We understand that current administrators and holders of CO and ES endorsements are not required to take the test. Will they need to take and pass the test if they apply for re-certification after the end of summer 2025?
 - a. No, once someone holds the ES or CO endorsement, they will not need to take a test to renew their credential.

Questions for MDE

- The cut score of 220 may not be very meaningful to candidates. Could you provide information on the actual percentage of correct answers needed, or how this will be determined?
 - This is a difficult question to answer, though it is a popular one. We can't share a percentage of correct answers needed to pass, because the percent may vary depending on which form a candidate is assigned.
