

Overcoming Writer's Block

---

Sometimes the most difficult part of writing is getting started. Staring at a blank screen or sheet of paper can become frustrating—and make you feel as if your ideas are “blocked.”

To work through writer's block, try the following:

Just write!

Put your pen to the paper and don't pick it up. If you are using a computer, turn off the monitor or cover your screen so you can't see what you are writing and just write. Don't try to make yourself stick to the topic or transition from idea to idea—just write! You can go back and look at what you wrote later.

As you free-write, try:

- Listing/writing about everything you know about your topic
- Listing/writing about everything you wish you knew about your topic
- Writing about what you want readers to know/feel/do upon reading your paper

Turn off your internal censor:

Allow yourself to write without worrying about perfection. You can revise your writing later, before you ever show it to anyone. For now, just get your ideas on the page. Making the writing sound good is something to worry about in future drafts and during the revision process—don't worry about it when you are just starting to write a paper.

Get to the “meat” of the paper:

Skip thinking of a title or composing the perfect introduction. Dive right into the main parts of the paper/essay/story—the meat of it. Introductions can be daunting and composing them can limit your freedom in discovering what you need and want to say about your topic. Besides, they are often easier to write after the rest of the assignment is drafted!

Try writing an outline, drawing a map, sketching a plan:

Planning ahead of drafting gives you a plan to stick to. Try plotting your basic points and giving your essay/paper/story an overall structure. You might find, after outlining, that filling in your sketch goes quite quickly for you. However, don't worry if you veer from your plan—it is there as a guide, not an absolute.

Create a mission plan or abstract:

Abstracts are short summaries of exactly what your paper or essay is going to say. They are most often used in professional journals. Mission statements are essentially the same idea—they are a brief idea of what it is you want to say or do within your paper. These help you to figure out exactly what it is you want to say.

Stop writing—just talk!

Meet with a Writing Consultant, a friend, a classmate, or an instructor to discuss the assignment. Sometimes just having a conversation about the assignment in general or about your topic in particular will get your writing juices flowing.

For more help in overcoming writer's block, try visiting these websites:*Tips for moving beyond writer's block

http://owl.english.purdue.edu/handouts/general/gl\_block.html

Tips for getting started on a writing project

http://owl.english.purdue.edu/handouts/general/gl\_plan1.html

How to write a mission statement

http://www.poynter.org/content/content\_view.asp?id=75509