Precepting Benefits Everyone

As a preceptor with Grand Valley State University, you are looked upon as a teacher and mentor. Being a teacher and mentor to our students is extremely rewarding as they are highly motivated to learn. Preceptors provide students with invaluable exposure to the real world of health care and influence the opinions and attitudes students carry throughout their career.

How You Will Help Students

As a preceptor, you will provide both teaching and professional role modeling for students. Preceptors supervise students' clinical activities and monitor the education process. Specifically, you will assign patients, observe clinical skills, review documentation, and serve as a resource for clinical questions.

How You Will Benefit

Clinical teaching encourages you to seek out and organize new knowledge. Yet in spite of thorough preparation, students will push your expertise to its limits and compel you to reflect on your own limitations. Engaging in this process regularly can result in greater learning than teaching, making you a better practicing professional and providing patients with improved quality of care.

In addition to the personal satisfaction of preparing the next generation of skilled workers, there are professional and personal incentives Grand Valley State University offers in return for sharing your invaluable expertise with our students. The Preceptor Perks program is specifically designed with the hope that you will take advantage of all it has to offer.
