Jann Joseph, Ph.D.
Biology Department

“Teaching is something I love to do. One reason I joined the faculty here is that Grand Valley truly values excellence in teaching.”

Jann Joseph has the credentials and experience to teach anywhere in the country. She chose to come to Grand Valley State University because of the university’s emphasis on teaching excellence and the impact it has on individual student achievement. As part of her focus on teaching, Jann frequently collaborates with undergraduate students on research projects that explore topics as diverse as multi-cultural teaching techniques and medicinal plants. The research initiatives are an integral part of the learning process, giving students a better understanding of their chosen field of study.

Professors such as Dr. Jann Joseph are why Grand Valley is known as a teaching university. Their real-world expertise, outstanding academic credentials, and genuine desire to help students succeed make Grand Valley a destination point for high-achieving students. It’s the kind of teaching excellence you’d expect from a small private college, combined with the programs, facilities, and resources only available from a major university. For more information, contact our Admissions Office at (616) 331-2025 or visit www.gvsu.edu

- Offering more than 200 areas of academic study
- All classes taught by faculty, not teaching assistants
- Liberal arts focus emphasizing critical thinking and creative problem solving
- Master’s level research opportunities for undergraduate students
- State-of-the-art learning, living, and research centers in Allendale and Grand Rapids